

Do you See what I See?

Ioannis Votsis

New College of the Humanities

ioannis.votsis@nchlondon.ac.uk

www.votsis.org

As the title suggests, in this talk I explore the difficulties surrounding the question of whether or not different individuals perceive the same things in roughly the same ways. I argue that despite all sorts of differences in the contents of perceptions, we nonetheless do perceive the same things out there. The motivation for this view builds on John Locke's inverted spectrum argument.