

On the Brink: When Object-Level Debates Fail

Ioannis Votsis

(New College of the Humanities and London School of Economics)

ioannis.votsis@nchlondon.ac.uk / i.votsis@lse.ac.uk

www.votsis.org

In this talk, I attempt to do three things. First, I offer a rough characterisation of the various kinds of opponents to object-level debates. Second, I consider (and defend against) two charges that have been directed at such a debate. Finally, I evaluate whether anything general can be said about the conditions under which object-level debates are worth having.