

Will Tomorrow be Another Day? (TEDx talk)

Ioannis Votsis

(New College of the Humanities and London School of Economics)

ioannis.votsis@nchlondon.ac.uk / i.votsis@lse.ac.uk

www.votsis.org

There are clear existential threats that must not be ignored. Perhaps the greatest of these relate to our invention of humanity-ending technologies. In this talk, I argue that the best way to tackle these threats is to add safeguards to the political process. To be precise, I proposed changes at all three levels of the political process, namely at the level of elected officials, political parties and voters. It may be objected, in reply, that such changes are radical and that we are better off maintaining a 'if it ain't broke, don't fix it' attitude. Against this objection, I argue that some changes need making before it's too late as the kind of cases we are considering are humanity-ending. Or, to put it another way, unless we act now, tomorrow may not be another day.